Dear Helen,

How's everything with you? I have been preparing hard for the BCTest(基本學力測驗) this semester. As I have told you before, those who do well on the test will be able to enter an ideal senior high school here in Taiwan, so most students are working hard for it. I have also made study plans to review all the subjects. I study at least 3 hours a day, hoping nothing but to get into a good school.

Yet, sometimes I feel down because of the pressures brought by schoolwork. So your letters are a great thing for me to go on with my studies. So, write to me as soon as possible.

Best wishes to your family.

"What do I want to be in the future?" We can ask ourselves this question today because we have a choice (選擇). Long ago, people didn't ask themselves the question because they had no choice. A young man always did the same kind of work as his father did. As for (至於) young girls, when they were little, they did a lot of housework in order to be a good housewife after they got married. Both young men and women were expected (期待) to marry the one their parents chose for them. Their marriages (婚姻) were not for love, but for some other reasons to bring two families together. Perhaps one family needed money and the other needed power, so the marriage would make each family stronger than before. Today, we have many choices; however, we are often not sure about what we want to do next. It is really hard to make a good decision (決定). Maybe, too much freedom (自由) can also be terrible.
